

The two largest pillars within my life have been my family and the community of Fallbrook, all in support of my future goals.

My community has continued to support me within the numerous extracurricular activities that I have participated in. This includes my time spent in the Fallbrook chapter of the Future Farmers of America (FFA), playing varsity Fallbrook Football for three years, and volunteering at the Fallbrook Food Pantry. Within FFA, I have been elected as an officer every year, in addition to being elected as a San Diego Section FFA officer during my senior year. Furthermore, I have raised and sold 3 swine, and over 120 plants as supervised agricultural experience projects, on top of competing in multiple public speaking competitions. I have played football for Fallbrook since my sophomore year, and volunteered for over 130 hours at the Fallbrook Food Pantry. However, my biggest supporter in my endeavors has been my family.

My family consists of my older brother, father, and mother. My brother is currently 22 years old, and is 5 years older than me. At 3 years old, he was diagnosed with autism, and I have watched him overcome every obstacle that has come his way, especially within his education, social life, and coping skills. My father works as a project manager for a German packaging and bottling machine manufacturer named Krones, and his job requires him to travel a lot. My mother works as an educational consultant, where she spends most of her time assisting parents in creating and enforcing 504 and IEP plans. She has been my most avid supporter throughout the college admissions process, and I am very grateful to her for that.

After I graduate high school, my academic goals begin with hopefully being admitted with a reasonable financial aid package to any of my top three colleges: Stanford University, the University of Chicago, or Yale University, while majoring in political science. My next goal is to attend and become involved within the legal aspects of this area of study, in order to uphold and defend the basic needs, opportunities, and justice for all people. After college and hopefully graduating from law school, I would like to work for an organization which protects the rights of the people.
